Novem^[ber]. 1763. At Mobbille, in Louisiana, Jn^t Walker, Soldier in the 22^d Reg^t from a cold caught by lying exposed to the weather the night after landing, had the whole face jaw & throat of the left side swelled to a great degree, attended wth some fever and a difficulty of breathing.

The swelling was highest & hardest in the parotid gland. He was blooded freely, gently purged, and a large Poultice put to the swelling. The 5th day his difficulty of breathing being rather increased, and his left eye quite closed, a large Blister was applied to the back of his neck -- The next morning the tumor broke and discharged plentifully. The 7th day a part of the gland appeared to have cast off and came away with the dressings. The swelling & other symp= =toms in two days were quite gone, & the sore soon healed, all to a small opening, through which, for about ten days, a great quantity of clear Saliva continued to ooze out upon the lower part of the cheek; a plain proof that the duct of the parotid gland was injured. yet he was intirely cured in a short time by the use of only dry lint compressing the part and often changed as it grew wet--
